The Prison Commission.

There never was a greater mistake made in Kentucky than when the Legislature took the appointment of the Prison Commissioners from the Governor. It was done for the purpose of preventing the Republican party from controlling the patronage connected with the management of our penal institutions. It would have been far better to have let the Republicans control the patronage than to have had the Prison Commissioners control the Legislature, which they have done since the law was changed. The Prison Commissioners have not violated any law in doing this. In truth, they have done nothing more than most men in their position would have done. We have never yet known men who had power over the acts of a legislative body that have not exercised that power. The present Prison Commissioners, so far as the management of our penitentiaries is concerned, have probably done it as well as if they had been appointed by the Governor instead of being elected by the Legislature. The Democratic platform did not condemn in its platform the Prison Commissioners; it merely condemned the method of their election. As long as the Legislature names the Prison Commissioners the men who hold these positions will seek to have their friends elected to the Legislature and will use all the methods of modern politics to that end, including the promise of positions and other things which they control. This is not the bad part of the present law, but the evil effects that grow out of it. When they have helped to elect a majority of the Legislature they are in a position to influence the Legislature to pass or defeat measures that have nothing whatever to do with the management or control of the penal institutions. Their very power and influence secured by efforts put forward in the election of the Legislature, makes lobbyists of them, not corrupt lobbyists, but lobbyists just the same; who, by their personal influence, can secure the defeat or the passage of any law which meets their favor or disapproval. It has been exercised a number of times in a way the people did not approve. It has come to pass that it is the Prison Commissioners making and defeating laws. It has given to them greater power over the law making body than the Governor, for he can only recommend and vote, while the Prison Commissioners can command. The people of the State, regardless of politics, do not want this influence over legislation vested in the hands of the Prison Commissioners. It must be taken away from them so that the Legislature may be free to do at all times the will of those they represent.

The News has no personal feeling against the present Prison Commissioners. As far as we know they have given the State a good record in the management of the penitentiaries, and we repeat in exercising their influence upon the Legislature they have only done what most other men would have done, but we think the manner of their selection is absolutely wrong and hurtful, calculated to increase the abuse rather than correct wrongs in the State, having an influence upon the Legislature never contemplated in our form of government. The Democratic party is pledged to change their manner of selection and a Democratic Legislature must carry out this behest of the party to merit the approval of the people.—Elizabethtown News.

Indiscrete Hunters.

It is unfortunate for the Nimrods who find great sport in search of the game little bird of the stubble, the Bob White, that there are so many indiscrete hunters who seem to have so little respect for the farmer whose lands they invade. A true sportsman and an experienced bird hunter will not injure stock or molest those things which are prized by the farmer and his wife, and which are theirs by the "sweat of their brows." Since the opening of the game season many reports have reached the city that hunters have been guilty of shooting turkeys and other stock, and taking possession of articles not belonging to them. Such acts as these are not committed by real sportsmen but by irresponsible people who take advantage of the opportunity to confiscate property belonging to others. The only recourse left to the farmer is to have warrants issued for those guilty of such acts and see to it that they are punished as prescribed by law.

With the Coming of Middle Age.

CHAPTER XV.

Accusation and Admission.

Now that the great moment had come—for Langford had at last recognized the woman whom he sought in spite of her strange early—became suddenly acutely conscious of trivial details and accurately responsible to matters of no moment. He stepped, for instance, near the bow of the boat, got the cushions that he might allow the men to land but that they must remain close to the beach and within easy call and see that the boat was properly secured. Then he turned and walked slowly to the shore where he had been for that moment and how tardy he was in availing himself of it when it came toward the two who stood silently watching a little distance away.

He was dressed in a boating suit of white and wore a white yachting cap. He was distinctly good looking. Langford, who is this man, suddenly pointed had refined his face to a certain degree and he was not an unworthy specimen of humanity in appearance. The man looked at him with a steady gaze and a sudden sense of dismay to find the new comer so worthy of respect on the ground of appearance at least.

"The glance that Langford gave the man was at once casual and indifferent. His whole interest was centered upon the woman. He found himself 'trembling violently in spite of the superhuman efforts he put forth at control. It was only the most from constraint indeed that enabled him to approach her at all. As he drew near to her, he took off his cap, bowed to her and strove to speak in a steady voice."

"Katharine," he said at last hoarsely, "thank God that I have found you!"

"Woman," said the man by her side, stepping swiftly forward and confronting Langford, "who is this man?"

"His name," returned the woman steadily, "is Valentine Arthur Langford."

"What do you do to her," asked the man with the bluntest directness, "that she weeps at the thought of you; that she is filled with horror as you approach; that she looks at you as she does now? I have never seen that look upon her face since we have been upon this island."

Langford turned and faced the man as these singular queries were put to him.

"Who is this man, Katharine?" he asked, an angry flush in his face.

"I don't know for certain," the woman answered, "but I think his name is—"

"What has my name to do with it?" interrupted the man persistently. "Will you answer my questions?"

"When I know who you are and by what right you put them, I will decide," was Langford's contemptuous answer.

Stuffed up head will vanish. Keep up the treatment four or five times a day for a few days and hawking, spitting and foaming of mucus in the nose and throat will cease.

HYOMEI is guaranteed to end catarrh, coughs, colds, croup, asthma, catarrhal deafness or money back. Complete outfit $1.00, subsequent bottles if needed 50 cents at B. L. Middleton and druggists everywhere.

How she loathed Langford. She thought for a moment that she had only to say the word and her island companion would tear him to pieces. She succeeded now far after all she had succeeded in instilling into his mind the restraints of civilization. She began to see dimly that such an achievement was beyond the power of any single individual; that it had been in the past and would always be in the future the result of the co-operation and restraint of the many. Yet she forced herself to speak evenly to the visitor.

"Mr. Langford, I believe this man's name to be John Revell Charnock. I believe him to be an American, a Virginian. I found him here upon the island."

"This matters nothing," said the islander. "I don't care what this man's name is, or who he is. I want to know why he distresses you."

"Sir," said Langford, wondering what was the best tone to take with this singular being, "pray let us withdraw yonder to the shade of the trees where we can be more private."

The men in the boat who had scrambled out upon the sands had been eager spectators and auditors of everything that had gone on. Their curiosity was greatly excited and their propinquity was evidently distasteful to Langford.

"You are refusing to answer my questions," said the man. "I will not be put off further."

"Man," said the woman, laying her hand upon his arm, "it is my wish."

"Oh, if you wish it."

He turned without a word and led the way rapidly across the beach out of earshot but not out of sight among the trees.

"Now," he said turning and facing the other two.

He noticed that the woman was ghastly white and that Langford was scarcely less pale.

"Sir," said Langford firmly, "I decline to answer your question. I have business with this lady and with her alone. It does not concern you and I am wrong."

The Mistake is Made by Many Richmond Citizens.

Don't mistake the cause of backache. To be cured you must know the cause. If the pain comes from sick kidneys, you must help the kidneys. A resident of this vicinity shows you how.

John T. Barnett, Rowland St., Stanford, Ky., says: "I have used a great number of kidney remedies within the last three years and can say that Doan's Kidney Pills are the first that ever brought me lasting relief. My work as a carpenter obliges me to do heavy lifting at times, also much stooping. This usually weakens my kidneys and causes attacks of pain across the small of my back. beg you to withdraw for a moment and give me free speech with her. After that I may have some questions to put to you."

"Everything that concerns her concerns me," said the man, sternly. "What you have to say to her must be said to me. Speak on."

For a moment Langford looked as if he would have sprung upon the other, but he was so clearly no match for the wild stranger that discretion came to his aid and kept him still. Besides he had no wish for vulgar brawling then. He turned to the woman.

"Katharine," he said, "I have much to say to you. Can't you make this man hear reason?"

"She has made me hear reason for three years," answered the man for her before she could speak, "but her power ends in this hour."

The woman looked at him pitiously and nodded her head. She realized that the thread of destiny was taken from her hands and forever.

Mr. Langford, you will have to say to me whatever you wish before this man," she said at last.

"Why, 'tis impossible," cried the other.

"And," interposed the man, "you shall say nothing to her until you have answered my questions."

"There must be no violence," cried the man, stepping between the two. "No violence!"

For answer the man flung but with irresistible force, lifted her out of the way. She knew now where he got the strength to tear down the rocky wall and while she trembled, she thrilled.

"Katharine," said Langford—to do him justice he was not afraid—"what is this man to you?"

"I am nothing to her," answered the man, "except that I love her."

"And you?" said Langford, hotly, still addressing the woman.

"She loves me," again answered the other, "and we were happy until you brought the world to our shores. Since then she has wept. Look at her now!"

"My God," exclaimed Langford, "is it possible?"

"It is true," said the woman, finding voice at last and looking steadily from one to the other.

Langford's emotion now passed all bounds. He had trembled before; he shook now as if with the palsy. He saw the man and caught the trunk of one of the trees to steady himself.

"What are you to this man, in God's name?" he cried.

"Nothing. Ever since I fled from the ship on the hateful night and landed on this island, we have been friends, good friends. He was a castaway. He had forgotten his speech. He had lived here since he was a child. I taught him everything."

"To love you?" queried Langford in hot and bitter jealousy.

"That was one thing I learned myself," answered the man. "And yesterday, you might call it chance, but I call it God," said the man gravely, "discovered to us the love we bore each other and that is all."

"Are you—forgive the question," said Langford, addressing the woman, "and there was agony in his voice, 'as you were when I left you?'"

"I am a different woman, thank God!"

"Yes, but in the sense in which you mean the question, I am just as I was, save that I love this man."

"But you had no right to love him or any one," burst forth Langford bitterly.

"And do you reproach me with that?"

"Think of your wife."

"She's dead," said the man hoarsely. "I have searched the world for you. I have come back here to make amends, to seek forgiveness, to try to be good to God and man, to take you back, to do for you as long as I shall live all that a man can do."

"There was some genuine passion in his voice and he spoke with the most unimpaired and indifferent would have recognized it, but there was no response to it in the woman's heart. A greater love than his had come into her soul. The whole current of her being flowed to the man by her side."

"No," she said. "Your words have no appeal for me. They awaken no response in my heart. I love this man, not you."

"Have you thought," cried Langford meaningly, "that you are not free to love any one but me?"

"By heaven!" cried the man springing forward, "this time I will be answered. Why is this not free to love me or any one?"

"Because," said the other resolutely, "before she came into your life she belonged to me."

"Belonged to you?"

"Yes, to me."

"And by what tie?"

Langford hesitated. He was furiously wrought up. He saw that it was useless to make a break, a rupture between these two. He thought that if he could do so, his own suit might be the better prosper. He was in deadly earnest and therefore he took the risk. How frightful it was, he had no pre-conception. He did not understand that he was dealing with a primitive man. How should he? He did not understand what passion meant. He understood, to do him justice, for he was a fearless man, he would have ventured just the same.

"She was my mistress!" he said through his teeth.

"Shame! Shame!" cried the woman, and then fell silent, clasping her hands and waiting for what might come. The hour of her travail was upon her.

Langford flashed a look at her and then his gaze reverted to the man. The expected outbreak did not instantly come.

"Mistress!" said the other. "I know not what that means, but 'tis a word of bitterness. Say further and more clearly your intent."

"Why, you fool!"

"He that calleth his brother a fool shall be damned," said the man.

"Where have you lived," he cried, "that you don't know the meaning of words?"

"I have lived nowhere but here and I have never known a word but what this woman has taught me."

"Yet she could easily have taught you the meaning of that word," the other responded with cruel, ruthless meaning.

"I will take the lesson from you."

"You will have it then!"

"I will."

"She was my wife, but without the blessing of God or the law of man. I owned her, do you understand? I possessed her body and soul."

"Not soul," said the woman, but the protest was lost.

"Woman, Shall I Throw Him Down and Kill Him?"

was prepared for an attack. He dealt a blow at the man's head with all the force of his arm, and skill and training enabled him to put into it more than one would have fancied from the slowness of his figure. He struck the man fairly in the chest. The blow apparently might have staggered an ox, it had no effect whatever upon the other. In an instant Langford was caught as if in the grasp of a whirlwind. He was lifted from the earth and held high in the air. For one tense moment, unable to struggle, he hung upon uplifted arms. He heard a voice beneath him cry:

"Woman, shall I throw him down and kill him?"

"Do him no hurt," said the woman, "for what he has said, as he sees it, is true."

CHAPTER XVI.

At these appalling words the strength seemed all at once to go out of the man's arm. Heavily, but not with purposeful ungentleness, he slowly set Langford down upon his feet on the sand.

"You brute!" cried the other man, trembling with impotent anger.

There was nothing that he could do personally. If he had possessed a weapon he would have killed the islander, but he was unarmed and helpless. Therefore he turned toward the beach and called to his men. They had seen the sudden attack and were already running across the sands.

"No," said the woman, "that word belongs to you. You have told the truth, and yet you do it. She turned to the companion of the island."

"Man," she said, "you have loved me. You must hear what I have to say."

"You have said that it was true," he muttered, "and the man who has said it lives. Lives!"

His voice rose to a cry. He turned toward Langford again. But by this time the six blue jackets who made up the girl's crew were close at hand.

"Hale," cried Langford to the crew, "swain, 'seize that brute yonder, and—'"

The woman was still wearing the look she habitually carried. She used it often and kept the blade bright and of keen edge. She whipped it out on the instant, her civilization falling from her like a discarded garment when the man she loved was threatened.

"Let no one lay hand upon him," she cried, "and I will defend him. I swear it. I will deliver it into my own hand if he be touched."

"Give me the knife," said her companion, suddenly.

Before she could prevent him, he whipped it out of her hand. She turned toward the huddled group of sailors, the bright blade lifted, "which of you will touch me?"

The men shrunk back. There was something so furious in the aspect of the man, his power was so evident and his temper as well that none dared to precipitate an attack.

"Turning to Langford," said the woman, "a moment since I saved your life. At a word from me he would have thrown you from him and broken your bones. You must, as you must, give this man this knife. He is your friend. You are safe from him, I promise you."

That might have been the result of this appeal can never be determined. For at that moment a new factor entered upon the scene, a factor whose presence was as surprising and unexpected as it was determined. From out to sea, yet near at hand, came a muffled detonation, the roar of a heavy gun. Around one of the headlands that rose on that side of the island there swept the white sails of another great ship beside which the yacht, imposing though she was, was a toy. It was the woman who saw it first.

"Look!" she cried. "A ship of war, a cruiser. See, from her staff the flag of the United States. This land is American. I claim it by right of discovery. Lay but a hand upon this man, and I will have you and these things. Their glasses have searched the shore. They have seen this encounter. That gun was a warning. A boat puts off. Thank God, we are saved from you!"

Things had transpired even as she said. What the cruiser was doing in those seas, how happened she to there were things as yet unknown. But that she was there was apparent. She had approached the island from the other side, and had sailed around it. Her men had observed the encounter on the shore, which seemed to her between natives and persons from the yacht, which was in plain view a little farther out to sea, and the gun had been fired to call attention to the power of the United States.

This put an entirely new face on the whole affair. Matters were taken out of the hands of the parties to the quarrel. The law had come to the island. The danger did not, could not know it, but his baffled antagonist realized it immediately. So did the woman. At Langford's command, his men, much bewildered at the scene they had witnessed, were drawn up by their boat. He himself presently followed after, and stood upon the strand awaiting the approach of the heavy man-of-war cutter which had been put away from the white cruiser's side.

"Man," she said, softly, "this is what I had to tell you."

He nodded. A hollow groan burst from his lips.

"His mistress," he muttered, brokenly.

"I would not have had you learn in this way, and now that you have heard so much, you must hear more," she went on, not sparing herself, though she might have justly resented the word. She was dealing with more serious things than words now. The world holds me stained, polluted, it may be said, but I am not the sterner that it thinks me or he portrays."

"You said it was true," doggedly cried the man.

"Yes, but not all true."

"And I have it in my hands, and still he lives."

"Won't you hear me?" pleaded the woman.

The man shook her off and turned away. The very innocence which had prevented his understanding at first the charge made it the more hideous when comprehension came. He had loved this woman with a love that passed the love of men, for there had not entered into his mind the faintest possibility that she could ever be or ever have been other than what she seemed, a daughter of the gods. In truth, in sweetness and in purity. And this strange man had come from out the darkness and proclaimed her his mistress, his cast-off, abandoned mistress.

Once the crew was given he found more hideous depths of infamy in that word than would have appeared had he been a wiser and more experienced vision. He wanted to see clear and the soul of this woman that a man of the world would have known instantly that there was an explanation, which the child of nature could not see forthcoming. He wanted to be turned from her and alone, and he away as if to plunge into the depths of the forest, but with gentle force she restrained him.

"You are a man, with a man's power and a man's soul and a man's heart, you cannot fly now. You must stay and face the problem. The question of life and death depends upon what we do now, perhaps his life, too."

"O, God," cried the man, recurring again to that bitter thought, "I had him in my hands and spared him!"

"But you spared him for my sake," said the woman, "think of that."

"For your sake," declared the man, pointedly. "I would and should have killed him."

"Thou shalt not kill!" said the woman, softly.

"An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," returned the man. "He and you upon you slew my heart. His death would be no murder, but retribution."

"But it was in part my fault," returned the woman, bravely making her confession.

"I will never believe it. It cannot be."

"And yet it was, but you shall have the whole truth to-day, and you shall judge. This much I will say, that though all that I said was true, yet I hold myself blameless and innocent. The world judges me harshly, and it may be that you will find its judgment just. Yet I do not hold myself as on trial at this moment, but you."

"I do not understand."

"There are things that you do not understand, my friend. The waters which I had been left in ignorance."

"Nay, that is not a man's wish, but a child's."

"Of one thing I am certain."

"And what is that?"

"That I should have killed him!"

"Nay," said the woman again, "that is not a child's wish, but a brute's."

"You said yourself," he flashed at her, "that there were some things a woman could not forgive, and this is one that a man puts in the same class."

The woman sighed. There occurred to her at the moment no answer which was adequate to the stark realism of this fact. The conversation had reached an impasse beyond which it could not progress without the full and complete explanation which now there was neither time nor opportunity to give, for the boat from the man-of-war was approaching the shore. The woman stepped resolutely down the strand to meet it, and the man, after a slight hesitation, followed her.

So soon as the boat's keel grated on the bottom in the shallow water, a middle-aged officer rose from the stern sheets and stepped ashore followed by a younger companion in the uniform of a sergeant of marines. A little squad of privates in the bow landed and fell in line with martial celerity and precision. The officer in charge, who wore the white tropic uniform of a lieutenant commander, now faced the people on the island; he had instinctively divided into two groups, one on either side of him. To the right stood the man and behind him the woman, to the left Langford, back of him his crew. It was to the latter that the officer first addressed himself.

"Sir," he began, "I am the executive officer of the United States cruiser Cheyenne, detached on special service. We raised this island this morning, ran it down, circled it, saw the yacht yonder—"

He paused.

"It is my yacht, sir, the Southern Cross," answered the other. "My name is Langford."

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Langford. Mine is Whitaker."

The lieutenant commander touched his cap as he spoke. Langford lifted his, and the two shook hands.

"We saw," continued the lieutenant commander, "what appeared to be some sort of a fracas with the natives, and fired a gun to attract attention, and Capt. Ashby sent this boat party ashore under my charge to do whatever was necessary. Perhaps you can explain how you came to be embroiled with the natives."

"Sir," said the woman. And the fact that she addressed him in his own language, and with the cultured accents of the well-bred and the well-educated, caused the officer to start violently—"the island is mine."

Mr. Whitaker turned and looked deliberately at her, his surprise equalled by his admiration. The tone that she wore was a rough garment, and shapely, but few vestments were better calculated to set off her exquisite proportions. The grace and beauty of her figure, the nobility and intelligence of her face took added luster from the contrast of the utterly simple, natural and primitive. Whitaker's glance fell upon a well-kept perfect woman. The constraining influences of civilization had been so long absent that nature had time and opportunity to reveal its own perfect in their symmetry and strength; her feet were such as those to which ancient Greece had bowed; her hands were shapely, graceful, yet strong; her dark eyes looked at him fearlessly; her dark hair rose like a somber, cloudy crown above her brow. The fierce sun, the open air, the wild wind had not mated the clear, slightly olive pallor of her face. The woman had been beautiful before. Now that nature had had free way, she was nobly lovely. She had stood a little in the rear of the man at first and the lieutenant commander had not particularly observed her. When she spoke, she stepped into the open. He stared and stared amazed.

Indeed, the direct intensity of his glance added a sudden new perception to the woman's faculties and for the first time in years she realized that she was standing before her fellow man naked. In an swift movement convention leaped across the missing years and caught her in its arms. The red flashed into her cheek; beneath her rude vest her bosom rose and fell. Her instinct for the moment was to fly. She wished that she had put on those treasured garments which she had kept for a scene like this in that cave all those years. It was too late now. She summoned her courage, and realizing that dignity, after all, is not made of clothes or conventions, once more addressed him.

"Sir," she said, "my name is Katharine Brenton. I am not, as you might well think, a savage, but a castaway."

"I beg your pardon," said the officer, "it is possible that you are the Katharine Brenton who wrote 'Fate and Destiny'?"

"I am that unhappy woman."

"Unhappy?"

"Yes," returned the other. "I—"

"Madam," said the lieutenant commander, flushing deeply and bowing in his turn. He had taken off his cap at her first word. "I beg your pardon, I have heard something of your story."

He was very much embarrassed. It was Langford who took up the tale.

"Since you know so much, Mr. Whitaker, you may as well hear the rest. Indeed, I am anxious that the world should hear it. Miss Brenton and I, we—er—did not believe in marriage, and we went away—together."

Every word was agony to Langford, who was a proud man; it was worse than agony to Katharine Brenton, who was a proud woman; and it was worse agony of all to the man of the island. But Langford persisted. He did not care how he hurt himself. Indeed, he rather luxuriated in the consciousness of his own pain. It was part of his explanation. He realized that he would have hurt Katharine, but perhaps the very keenness of her pain would make her realize her position and he wanted to win her, now that he had found her and seen her, more than ever. Nor was his passion a base one. Again he was ashamed of what he had already said, so he spoke the more frankly. He gave no thought at all to the other man, but if he had, he would have been glad to hurt him until he killed him.

"We went on my yacht yonder three years ago. I—in short—I behaved like a brute on it. I will admit it."

"I discovered that he was a married man," said the woman swiftly at this juncture. She, too, would be frank. This grave and middle-aged of fiercer should bear all. "He had pressed his belief in their view, which if you have read 'Fate and Destiny,' you realize that I entertained."

The officer bowed.

"And have you abandoned them now?" he asked.

"Absolutely," was the firm answer. "I am a Christian woman, thank God!"

"Thank God, say I, too," continued Langford. "Yet I was not altogether harshly and it may be that you will find its judgment just. Yet I do not hold myself as on trial at this moment, but you."

"I do not understand."

"There are things that you do not understand, my friend. The waters which I had been left in ignorance."

"Nay, that is not a man's wish, but a child's."

"Of one thing I am certain."

"And what is that?"

"That I should have killed him!"

"Nay," said the woman again, "that is not a child's wish, but a brute's."

Her instinct for the moment was to fly. She wished that she had put on those treasured garments which she had kept for a scene like this in

"I can well understand that," said the officer, gravely, as a matter of course.

"I thought that marriage meant nothing, and that the old tie might be regarded. I hated the woman who bore my name, and so as Miss Brenton's disciple, as her devotee, for I loved her, I will admit, she smiled dearly, 'more than her philosophy,' I proposed that we should trample upon the conventions she had taught me to believe as despised, and go away together."

"But you were not free," said the woman, "to enter upon such an undertaking."

"No, by heaven!" cried Whitaker. Now, this conversation had been carried on with three auditors, or groups of auditors, besides those participating; Langford's yachtmen, the marines and seamen from the Cheyenne, for the boat was against the shore, and the man of the island. Whitaker first awoke to the situation.

"I beg your pardon," he said, "but would it not be better to continue this conversation privately?"

"I think so," returned Langford.

"No," said the man of the island, addressing the lieutenant commander for the first time. "You and these men are the world. I want the story told where all the world may hear."

Whitaker's surprise at this remark was scarcely less than he had experienced when the woman addressed him. Who was this splendid, godlike form of man standing gloomily by the woman's side, a silent, eager listener to all that transpired? What had he to do with the question that he assumed this tone and manner of authority? The officer turned toward the woman.

"I think," said he quietly, "that the lady should be allowed to decide."

"My wish is my friend's wish," said the woman laying her hand softly upon the man's arm.

Whitaker observed that the man shook it off nervously, but the point being settled, there was no further appeal.

"Pray proceed with your story, Mr. Langford," he continued.

Will Attend Inauguration from Madison.

As the date for the inauguration of Governor-elect James B. McCrory draws nearer greater interest is being manifested by our citizens, and it is estimated by those in a position to know that one thousand people from Madison county will be present to witness the ceremonies incident to the induction into office of Madison's honored citizen.

Mr. J. H. Kennedy, a life-long friend and admirer of Governor McCrory, will act as chief marshal of the parade, and is having printed handsome badges of silk ribbon, on which is inscribed: "McCrory's Home People," and in addition has had prepared handsome banners to be used on this auspicious occasion.

As the inauguration takes place next Tuesday, Dec. 12th, it will be well for those who so generously and cheerfully contribute on that day to the fund for the parade to notify Mr. Kennedy at once so that enough badges may be provided, and all who march in the parade should wear a badge, in order that the visitors to the county on that day may form an opinion of the esteem in which Governor-elect McCrory is held in his home county.

Take lunch with the Baptist ladies Saturday, Dec. 9th, at Masonic Temple.

Thanks.

The ladies of the P. A. C. Infirmary Board and the nurses want to thank all those who so generously and cheerfully contributed on Donation day and also at the churches on the first Sunday in December.

Big Rush At Sheriff's Office.

The office of Sheriff David McCord did a land office business last Tuesday. Wednesday and Thursday in the way of collecting county and state taxes, the total amount collected on those days exceeding sixty thousand dollars. Sheriff McCord and his deputies, Messrs. Simmons, Bush and Deatherage, were kept busy from early morning until late in the evening on these days receiving money and writing receipts. The occasion for this rush on the part of the tax-payers was to avoid the penalty which is prescribed by law on all taxes not paid by December 1.

Tobacco Growers Will Lose Money.

Burley tobacco is now selling at a price below the cost of production. But few farmers will get a price this year that will net them a profit, others will break even on the proposition, while the great bulk of the growers will actually lose money. What then of the future?

The pooler is more convinced now than ever that some sort of a co-operative method of handling and selling tobacco must be devised in order to make its production profitable.—Lexington Herald.

Head-end Collision.

The midnight passenger train from Cincinnati Thursday night ran into a freight train at Shearer. The freight was going onto the switch to give the passenger train the right of way when the collision took place and was running at a slow rate of speed when the passenger came in contact with the freight engine. The engineer of the passenger train discovered the freight train in time to reverse his engine and had succeeded in reducing the speed before the two trains came together. The engines were slightly damaged, causing a delay of a few hours in the arrival of the fast trains into this city. A number of our citizens were aboard the passenger, but aside from a terrible jostling none of them were any the worse for wear.

Extensive Arrangements.

The railroads of the state have made extensive arrangements for transportation of people from all parts of Kentucky who wish to attend the inauguration at Frankfort on Dec. 12.

The L. & N. R. R., ever alive to the accommodation of the public and with an eye to business, have put special trains, well equipped as to service, on all of its line. In many cases, parlor cars will be attached and when needed sleepers have been arranged for. A special will leave Richmond at 8 a. m., and returning leave Frankfort at 6 p. m. Round trip fare $1.00. This rate, $1.00, will also hold good on the regular train leaving Richmond at 7:30 a. m. and returning leaving Frankfort at 4:30 p. m.

Our readers are not interested in the schedules for other parts of the state. Suffice it to say that every town and hamlet in the state has been provided for.

Narrow Escape From Death.

While out hunting last week with his father and Mr. Dan Breck, Neale Bennett, Jr., had a very narrow escape from death. Mr. Bennett discovered a squirrel and suggested to his son that he dismount and shoot the animal, and in attempting to get off of his horse, young Bennett's foot caught in the stirrup and he fell to the ground, suspended by one limb. This frightened the horse which began to lunge, but fortunately the young man's father, who was also mounted, from some unaccountable cause, seized the horse by the bit before the son attempted to dismount and succeeded in holding the frightened animal until Mr. Breck came up and relieved the young man from his perilous position. Had it not been for the forethought of Mr. Bennett in taking hold of the animal as he did the horse would have run away and his son would have met a horrible death.

Goose Bone Presented To Chimax.

Mr. Phil Arbuckle brought to THE CLIMAX office Monday a goose bone, one of the finest specimens we have seen in many years. This bone is taken from the breast of the goose and with the other citizens is a never failing humorist. Mr. Arbuckle, realizing our ignorance when we attempted to read the forecast of the weather,

LAXATIVE SENT FREE TO TRY

It may be taken for granted that there is no family that does not sometimes need a laxative. If you don't know of a good laxative, or if the laxative you are using is losing its effect, we want to call your attention to Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of families are using successfully.

We have scores of letters from mothers, and scores from prominent men saying they use it personally and giving it to their families, men like Mr. C. K. Smith of the Traffic Clearing House, Pine Bluff, Ark., and Mr. George B. Turner, a lawyer of Harlan, Ky. The thousands of mothers who use it themselves and give it to their children would take too much space to mention.

The reason they prefer Syrup Pepsin is that it is a mild, gentle laxative- tonic that does not gripe- effective and yet so mild that babies can take it. Its tonic ingredients invigorate the body and strengthen the stomach and bowel muscles so they again do their work naturally. If you have been a victim of salts, pills and strong cathartics you will discard them when you once use Syrup Pepsin.

You can buy a fifty cent or one dollar bottle of any drugist, but before doing so you may want to try it free. If so, send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will promptly forward a free sample bottle. Then, being convinced, do as others are doing and buy it in the regular way of your favorite drugist.

For the free sample address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 402 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

For Your Hair

Here Are Facts We Want You To Prove At Our Risk.

When the roots of the hair are entirely dead and the pores of the scalp are glazed over, we do not believe that anything can restore hair growth.

But, when the hair roots retain any life, we believe there is nothing that will so surely promote hair growth as will Revell's "30" Hair Tonic. To prove that statement, we promise to promptly return all the money you pay us for Revell's "30" Hair Tonic, should it not please you.

Recall "30" Hair Tonic destroys the germs which cause dandruff, itching, and baldness. It penetrates to the roots of the hair, stimulating and, by promoting circulation, nourishing them.

Recall "30" Hair Tonic helps to relieve scalp irritation, to remove dandruff, to prevent the hair from falling out, and to promote increased growth of hair. It comes in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain it only at our store- The Revell Store, 111 Perry Drug Store.

May Sell Pooled Tobacco.

It is said that the officials of the Burley Tobacco Society are having a large number of headcups of the 1909 pooled tobacco sampled, with a view of selling same at private sale. The tobacco being sampled is now stored in Cincinnati, Shelbyville and Lexington. All grades are included. The Executive Committee is not making their plans public, but it is thought that there is a deal on the way with the American Tobacco Company for the remainder of the 1909 crop, or at least a large portion of it, at private sale. Every tobacco is a very scarce article, but little being in the 1910, while the 1911 crop does not show any more.

Kentucky's Hog Crop.

Kentucky's swine are fourteenth in value and thirteenth in number among the states of the United States. These figures are, according to statistics, relative to all swine reported on farms at the thirteenth decennial census April 15, 1910, and contained in an official statement issued Wednesday by Census Director Durand at Washington.

The Bluegrass swine are worth $8,940,731, and number 1,400,210. There are from 124,173 farms reporting. Hogs and pigs number 1,037,449, and spring pigs 432,887. The value and number of Kentucky's swine are greater than those in Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi, the other states in the East-South Central division. Thus Kentucky leads this geographical division. Iowa has the largest total value of swine on farms, amounting to nearly $70,000,000. Illinois ranks second, with $30,000,000, and ten other states, including Indiana with $23,740,000, report more than $10,000,000 worth of swine each.

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

A MINNESOTA REGIMENT AT GETTYSBURG.

By A. W. MACY.

At a critical juncture during the battle of Gettysburg, when the Confederates were pressing hard on certain points, General Hancock rode up to a body of soldiers and inquired "What regiment is this?" "The First Minnesota," was the response.

"Charge that line," commanded Hancock. Not all the regiment was there, only eight companies, 282 men; while the foe against whom they were to hurl themselves were many times that number. But it was theirs not to make reply or reason why, and not for one moment did they think Hancock had blundered. Into that gate of death they plunged, while artillery and musketry rained them with shot and shell. Straight to the mark they went, and they accomplished what they were sent to do: they checked the enemy's advance and held the ground till reinforcements came up. But at the end of that awful fifteen minutes fifty of the 282 lay dead, one hundred and seventy-five were wounded, and thirty-seven held the line of battle."

Fog Hard to Pierce.

A dense or thick fog will obscure objects at a distance of 1,000 feet. The recent accident to an ocean steamer of the Anchor line illustrates the fact. An iceberg was sighted some 300 miles from the coast, but the passengers could hear the echo from their voices reflected by the walls of ice, though the iceberg was invisible to them. Otherwise, there are no echoes at sea.

Be Generous in Judgment.

Nothing New About "High Finances."

Prized finances is not exclusively a habit of recent years. At the Riggs National Bank in Washington, says the Popular Magazine, there is carefully guarded a proof of the foregoing assertion. Regarding the proof there is this story:

"One winter morning Henry Clay, finding himself in need of money, went to the Riggs Bank and asked for the loan of $250 on his personal note. He was told that, while his credit was perfectly good, it was the inflexible rule of the bank to require an indorser. The great statesman hesitated up Daniel Webster and asked him to indorse the note. 'With pleasure,' said Webster. 'But I need some money myself. Why not make your note for $200 and you and I will split it?' This they did. And today the note is in the Riggs Bank- unpaid."

Unearth Skeletons of Prehistoric Giants.

Evidence of a prehistoric race- have been uncovered by Hugh Yates, a prosperous land owner of Pine Grove, on his farm in Fayette county. While excavating beneath a high cliff on his place Yates came upon an immense grave containing a human skeleton. The frame was of great proportions. His curiosity aroused, Mr. Yates called in some neighbors, and armed with picks, they burrowed their way into the side of the cliff and found an ancient sepulcher crowded with human skeletons, some of them larger than the one first found. One of the frames measured 19 feet. Along with the skeletons were found various wrought jewels and strange ornaments, while cooking vessels and musical instruments of queer design were unearthed in great profusion. The diggers are still at work and expect to make even more important finds.

Fresh eggs in Chicago are like jewels beyond price.

At least, so the Butter and Eggs Board would have the public believe. "There are not enough fresh eggs coming into Chicago to make price quotations worth while," said President G. W. Bull, of the Butter and Eggs Board. "We cannot place a value on fresh eggs if there are not any, and this seems to be the condition here and all over the country, for that matter, at the present time. The hens are not laying and that's the whole trouble. If we named a quotation, it would have to be an ideal one- what would the price in case fresh eggs were being brought in."
